To Whom It May Concern,

I have read various articles about the proposed regulations to ban trading options in IRA accounts. Some of what I read suggests that options trading won't be banned, but it will become more expensive due to this regulation and the defensive posture expected to be taken by the brokers.

Either way, it is taking away my freedom to manage my money and my retirement as I see fit.

I don't need or want Big Brother looking out for me. Please leave the current regulations as they are. The current bureaucracy is sufficiently onerous. We don't need more.

Best Regards,
